The game offers 2 game modes, classic mode and Amazon themed Travel mode, which is designed to be short and fast to play. You can even go head-to-head with other players during your multiplayer mode! Stage 10 can be a card game that can be new to many players, so the game comes with a fun and comprehensive tutorial, which will not only explain the terminology used in the game; But will also help you through a few games just so you can see everything in action. Now the main goal of any player playing in stage 10 is to complete the goal of the stage. Sometimes there are only 1 goals, and in other cases, you may need to complete 2 goals in order to complete the stage. In this game goals usually require to get a set of X number cards (may depend on the card number or color) or run, which means that you need to collect a series of cards that are arranged according to its value / number (color does not matter here). Like UNO, Stage 10 also has power-up cards, namely a Wild card and a Skip card. Wild card can fill any card you need to complete the goal, while the Skip Card is designed to stop other players from playing in turn, effectively giving you the opportunity to complete the stage before they can. Not to mention if you play classic mode, you should know that there are 10 stages that you will have to go through in order to win the game. However, amazon themed Journey mode, which offers shorter levels of play, most levels here require only completing a few stages to win the level. What if you have already completed the stage goals? Well, the second goal to conclude the stage is to empty your hand cards as fast as you can. You can do this by adding cards to the goals of the completed stage, including the sides of the opponents, and throwing the cards into the exhaust heap. Wash and repeat until all stages are complete, and if you are lucky, you can appear as the winner of the game! Now, in game single player (vs-AI) mode, you need to use the energy to play each new stage, and in classic mode at least, you drain your energy really quickly just by playing one game. Energy points restore themselves over time, but like any freemium games you can issue the premium currency that this There are gems to buy more energy. You can also get some nice extra awards by accumulating stars in game travel mode. Each level of play can give you up to 3 stars, and you want to collect as many of them as you can. Once you reach the assigned threshold, you will receive a prize, which usually consists of power-ups and coins. Of course, if you are a Star Pass member (VIP basically), you will get to unlock more bonuses. Stage 10: The World Tour comes with multiplayer mode as well as allowing you to test your mettle against other players from around the world. However, unlike single-player modes, you will have to issue coins to get into multiplayer matches. How many coins you get back depends on how well you do the game. Naturally, you will get the most coins to win. Fortunately, the game gives you free coins that you can collect daily. You can even choose the triple coins you get while watching an image ad. You can also watch other video ads to get additional coins up to 5 times a day. As a freemium game, Stage 10: World Tour game shop that sells a few items for real money. You can use real money to buy gems and card packages (packages with power-ups and a bunch of other things), and you can, in turn, use gems you bought or received to buy coins, energy and individual power-up cards. Stage 10: The World Tour is still relatively new and as such, it has a smaller but still quite large player base in its multiplayer mode. So far, I didn't have to wait too long to get into the playoffs. The graphics in this game are bright and colorful, in a way that is very similar to UNO. Sound effects and music are beautiful as well, giving you a pleasant atmosphere in which you can focus on your game and destroy your opponents. Summing up everything, Stage 10: World Tour is a fun and family-friendly card game designed to be available to players of all skills and ages. Even if you've never played a 10 stage game before, the tutorial in this game will be able to introduce you to all the key elements of the game, while giving you the freedom to come up with unique strategies of your own. I do not follow the recipes, but I like dabble .... I like cats and long hot baths, but not at the same time, fluent english, which is an important reason; I can't talk to my cats in their language, but I can moan about it sitting on my wizard's cat bedding my cat pyjamas (no I'm not strange you have a problem, not me). Everyone joking aside I'm a master's master of psychology (no I can't read my min..... oh wait I just? Oh never mind), so I am great at the psychological, story-based and horror video games (mostly a type of real life choice... oh chaos theory you nice thing). I also spend my weekends vigorously ripping my hair through football and taking adorbs pictures of my kitty cat. Comments (0) The game is fun at the beginning because they give you extra energy to get you hooked at the beginning, and the ads don't show so much. However, when you continue to play for a while, you quickly run out of energy, and the ads are followed by each arm, sometimes lasting 30 seconds. It takes 25 minutes to load enough energy to start with one hand. It's funny. It takes $2 to buy enough gems to play 6 hands. You can't even end up on one level of later trips with so much money, which I think is unacceptable. Given other fabulous strategy game programs, such as Settlers of Catan or Seven Wonders, available for $5 or less, including the entire game option, this whole program just feels like a money draw. You can pay $3 for programs to disappear, which is good, except that it doesn't solve the power problem. You just have the honor to pay $3 for something you still can't pick up and play as long as you want. If this game had a reasonable price tag to play unlimited $5-10, that would be reasonable, but unfortunately it just feels like a money grab. Also, like most other low-star reviews of the address, computers seem to be dealt better hands, and I've seen computer players pick up cards that don't help them, and throw them out to another computer player to pick up. In general, it's disappointing, after all, for a game that has so much potential. Potential.
